

Sable Meets Price Resistance

A very fine collection of 70,000 sables sold 30% at what can only be described as disappointing. Until today we have been able to sell 100% of all of the ranched mink and wild fur offered at price levels that in some cases, such as muskrats, was at fully last year's levels, while other articles declined from last years record prices.

In the sable sale, your auction company felt that it was in the best interests of all producers to keep the integrity of the prices intact, knowing that we have a short harvest of sables this year. We believe that the lower quantity that is expected this year will create improved market conditions at our later sales.
